

Perspectives of Women in Law

The changing landscape of the legal sector and what it means for ALL lawyers

In 1973 only 15% of lawyers in Singapore were women Today, that number is 42%

Gender diversity is as important for the legal industry as it is for any industry. While women and men leave university in almost equal numbers, men still greatly outnumber women in leadership roles in the sector. The legal industry has evolved but further change is required – and all lawyers will play a part, regardless of gender.

Baker McKenzie in partnership with The Centre for Future-ready Graduates at NUS Law is pleased to invite you for a panel discussion with accomplished lawyers to talk about the current and changing roles of women in law. Our panel will share their experiences and explore why gender diversity is important and what challenges the legal community needs to overcome to see this positive change continue. There will also be an opportunity to network over lunch after the panel discussion.
